CRIMINOLOGY MINOR

The Millersville University criminology program provides students with an opportunity to study criminal behavior and the operation of the criminal justice system within a broad sociological context. The combination of a criminology focus with the development of sociological research skills provides excellent preparation for a wide range of criminal justice careers as well as for graduate and professional school. The minor courses cover theories of criminal behavior, policing, the courts, corrections, and other crime-related topics. Students who minor in Criminology may also complete an internship in a criminal justice setting as part of their course work for the minor.
